Pay Revisers Hear of Trials That Beset Govt. Stenographers and Secretaries.

The path of a stenographer, typist and secretary in the Government service is beset with many thorns, according to testimony heard by the Congressional joint commission on reclassification of salaries this morn-

A stenographer must, for example, be on the alert to catch the word the dictator swallows." The typist "must be able to record he hieroglyphics of the writer who has forgotten his school-day penmanship lessons."

The way of the private secretary s even less rosy, for "he is the liplomat of the office. He not only has to please the outsider, but he must please his 'boss;' know his idiosyncrasies, respect his humors, anticipate his wishes and never make the error of attempting to 'keep out friend. Department, as chairman of the committee, declared that these employes were "the backbone of the Govern-ment service," although their work is generally underestimated. Because of the responsibilities assumed and the efficiency required, the setting of high educational requirements for entrance was recommended. "One of the main causes of poor work by typists and stenographere is undoubtedly due to the fact that they have not had a good fundamental training," the brief commented

The large turnover, attributed to inadequate salaries, was stressed and it was declared that the Government THIEVES HAVE GALA TIME valuable employes whom the Gov-ernment has helped to train for the benefit of the future employer in out-side work because the employe in the Federal service has enjoyed unusual facilities for development by reason of the wide variety of Governmental was classed as the highest branch of stenography, the brief said: "It may be fairly estimated that in amount of preparation necessary the shorthand reporting profession is fully comparable with those of law and medicine, while the actual work is gener ally much more exacting." The speed of typists was a question of considerable discussion. The reclassification commission had set, in fifty words per minute for the under typist, sixty words for the junior and seventy-five words for the senior
